MUSEUM OF CONTEMPORARY ART SAN DIEGO

Contemporary Collectors' Trip, Santa Fe

April 27 - May 1, 2012

SITE Santa Fe is a dynamic platform for the production and presentation of artistic and curatorial innovation. The current exhibition on view is:

Time-Lapse

Time-Lapse challenges the notion that an exhibition is a fixed entity with artworks that remain consistent throughout the time the exhibition is on view. Time-Lapse explores the possibility of a more dynamic exhibition environment by including artworks that change over time and utilizing curatorial structures that are based on change. With hourly, daily, and weekly alterations to the works in the show, no two days of Time-Lapse will be the same.

Questioning the nature of time is a subtext for some of the works in the exhibition; other works question the nature of current curatorial practice by exploiting alternative time-based exhibition platforms such as the performance series or the Internet.

12 PM Bus departs for restaurant

Agnes Martin, Bruce Nauman, Susan Rothenberg and Richard Tuttle. The current exhibition on view is:

Bill Jacobson: Place (Series)

This exhibition features eight images from Jacobson's series Place (Series); in the rear gallery there is a small selection of earlier work made between 1995 and 2008. Jacobson sums up his work as follows: "Inherent throughout my practice is the dialogue between absence and presence, the constant fading of history, and the vagaries of perception. In each body of work there are references to our individual and collective memories, and the various ways we hold on to some images while, over time, are letting go of others. For the past two and a half years, during two residencies at MacDowell and in my Brooklyn studio, I've been working on a new group of photographs titled Place (Series). They are the result of inserting rectangles of various sizes and surfaces in both constructed and natural settings. Ideally, they question what is 'real' and what is 'abstract', while suggesting that the notion of place, and the act of placing, come from choice, and desire."

3:30 PM Walk to Charlotte Jackson Fine Art

3:40 PM Tour Charlotte Jackson Fine Art

The Charlotte Jackson Gallery features Contemporary American and European Art, specializing in monochrome, concrete, light & space, modernism and color field painting. The current exhibition on view is:

Dialogues in Steel: Elliot Norquist, Jeremy Thomas

Sculptors, particularly those who work in various metals, must anticipate every bend, crease, cut and weld. That the raw material at times informs the shape of the finished piece rather than yielding to the will of the artist's hand isn't lost on Elliot Norquist or Jeremy Thomas; two artists who have spent the majority of their careers in conversation with the feral material into seemingly effortless forms. "Dialogues in Steel," is the first collaborative show between the two.

"Dialogues in Steel," is a moment in the lives of these two artists reconnecting in their ongoing conversation about pushing metal into broader landscapes. "Dialogues in Steel," pairs two primary architects in the world of contemporary sculpture. Norquist creates works of high sophistication and abstraction; it is a kind of contemplative minimalism. Norquist's work dances between a series of contraries: the circle in the square, the simple in the complex, the personal in the abstract, the natural in what is man-made. Shape and color are all important. A square with a circle cut from the center, a circle with a square cut. Norquist uses the sparest of visual vocabularies. Color and shape must retain their integrity and yet merge to become art. Norquist describes this precarious walk through contraries in an elegant way.
