X-TO+J-C: CHRISTO AND JEANNE-CLAUDE FEATURING WORKS FROM THE BEQUEST OF DAVID C. COPLEY

ON VIEW 2/2/14 THROUGH 4/6/14 > LA JOLLA
The late David C. Copley (1952–2012) was one of MCASD’s most passionate patrons and generous Trustees. He was also the most prolific collector of Christo and Jeanne-Claude’s work in the United States. To celebrate Copley’s great commitment to this enduring body of work and to honor his memory, X-TO+J-C: Christo and Jeanne-Claude Featuring Works from the Bequest of David C. Copley will open with a special supporters’ reception on January 31, 2014, the anniversary of David’s birthday. The exhibition will open to the public on February 2.

Christo is best known for the monumental projects he and his late wife and collaborator Jeanne-Claude accomplished over nearly four decades. These include the 24 1/2 mile-long Running Fence in California’s Sonoma and Marin Counties (1976), the Wrapped Reichstag in Berlin (1995), and the epic-scale crowd pleaser The Gates (2005), which comprised 7,053 fabric banners that spanned the walkways of New York’s Central Park.

X-TO+J-C will present the artist’s important Wrapped Package (1960) alongside many drawings and collages related to his early wrapped objects—chairs, road signs, motorcycles, and other commonplace items that disrupt our relationship to the everyday through their concealment. The exhibition also includes Christo’s large-scale Store Front (1965–66) and a related series of Show Windows from the early 70s, which signal an expansion of the artists’ sculptural practice to a new environmental realm.

Taken together, this exhibition features more than fifty works by Christo, and also highlights recent gifts from The David C. Copley Foundation and from the artist himself, in recognition of Copley’s patronage and support over the years. David’s generous bequest of this major collection is inspiring and MCASD is honored to celebrate his life and legacy with this exhibition. For additional information about programs surrounding this exhibition, visit www.mcasd.org.

X-TO+J-C: Christo and Jeanne-Claude Featuring Works from the Bequest of David C. Copley is organized by the Museum of Contemporary Art San Diego, with works of art received from The David C. Copley Foundation. Lead underwriting support has been generously provided by Colette Carson Rosston and Dr. Ivar Rosston, with major corporate underwriting contributed by Van Cleef and Arpels. Additional funding has been provided by Barbara and Charles Arledge, Jeanne Jones and Don Breitenberg, and Garn Muller. Institutional support for MCASD is provided, in part, by the City of San Diego Commission for Arts and Culture.

As our former Board President and friend to the Museum, David C. Copley left his legacy at MCASD by gifting 39 spectacular works by Christo that will be showcased in X-TO+J-C. Legacy gifts of artwork are extremely significant, as they allow the Museum to continue growing its collection and showcasing world-class contemporary art for future generations to enjoy. We will forever remember our friend David for his generosity and his deep admiration of Christo, which we can now share with this exceptional group of works. To find out more about planned giving at MCASD, please visit www.mcasd.org/join-give/leaving-legacy.
For the past 28 years, MCASD’s premier membership groups—the International Collectors and the Contemporary Collectors—have provided significant funds for the acquisition of new works for the Museum’s collection through their annual dues. Each year, MCASD’s curatorial staff organizes an exhibition of works, entitled Prospect, to be considered for acquisition by the Collectors. One or more of these works are then selected by ballot at the annual Selection Dinner, which is generously underwritten by Northern Trust. Thanks to the Collectors’ support, MCASD has added almost 100 works to its collection—works that were collectively purchased for approximately $3 million and that today are valued at over $12.4 million. The support of the International and Contemporary Collectors has allowed MCASD’s curators the vital support to discover new artists, enrich the MCASD collection, and build an engaged and informed community of collectors in San Diego.

Prospect 2014 is organized by the Museum of Contemporary Art San Diego, with funding provided by MCASD’s International and Contemporary Collectors. Institutional support for MCASD is provided, in part, by the City of San Diego Commission for Arts and Culture.

Janet Cardiff and George Bures Miller
> On View through 1/12/14
Janet Cardiff and George Bures Miller’s multimedia installations seem to alter time, allowing fictional and historical narratives to merge with the viewer’s own experiences.

Dana Montlack: Sea of Cortez
> On View through 1/12/14
Photographer Dana Montlack transforms biological specimens into beguiling graphic elements, which reference John Steinbeck’s The Log from the Sea of Cortez (1951).

Lost in the Memory Palace: Janet Cardiff and George Bures Miller
> On View through 1/12/14
This archival project of MCASD and the La Jolla Historical Society examines the evolution of their respective buildings at 700 and 780 Prospect Street in La Jolla.

Scripps on Prospect: Cultural Legacy
> On View 2/2/14 through 4/6/14
On view in the Joan and Irwin Jacobs Gallery, Scripps On Prospect: Cultural Legacy explores how the philanthropic spirit of Ellen and Virginia Scripps contributed to La Jolla’s social and cultural development, focusing on the history of the cultural zone along Prospect Street and Silverado. The exhibition represents part two of a collaboration between MCASD and the La Jolla Historical Society while the latter undergoes an ambitious rehabilitation project.
IN THE SÉANCE ROOM: ACQUISITION HIGHLIGHTS FROM 2003–2013

ON VIEW THROUGH 2/23/14 > DOWNTOWN

In the Séance Room presents a selection of objects acquired over the past decade. The exhibition takes its name from the last phrase in the title of Jeremy Blake’s multi-canvas painting which was acquired in 2003. The piece is part of a body of work that takes as its subject the legendary (and supposedly haunted) Winchester Mystery House in San Jose, California, as well as the legacy of 1960s Color Field painting. If Blake invokes hauntings and legacies, a number of other artists in the exhibition are likewise concerned with otherworldly communications and histories that linger. Felix Gonzalez-Torres’s untitled “dateline” piece summons political events and collective memories, while Christian Boltanski’s elegiac installation serves as a monument and memorial. Anne Collier’s aura portraits and Hany Armanious’s Untitled Snake Oil suggest pseudo-scientific and alchemical processes, alongside works by Alice Aycock, Matt Mullican, and Russell Crotty that seem to transcribe supernatural messages, cosmological systems, and the patterns of the night sky, respectively. The small central gallery features works that hybridize photography, video, and sculpture. Figures in these works occupy an uncertain space between visibility and invisibility.

The exhibition offers a look at some of the artists who have defined contemporary art practice in recent years, as well as a recent chapter in MCASD’s collection-building, as it seeks to preserve the past and to write the art history of the future. Artists in the exhibition include Jeremy Blake, Anne Collier, Nan Goldin, Felix Gonzalez-Torres, Matt Mullican, Catherine Opie, Joel Otterson, Steve Roden, Taryn Simon, and Andrea Zittel, among others.

In the Séance Room: Acquisition Highlights from 2003–2013 is organized by the Museum of Contemporary Art San Diego. Institutional support for MCASD is provided, in part, by the City of San Diego Commission for Arts and Culture.

MIKE BERG: RECENT TEXTILES

ON VIEW THROUGH 2/23/14 > DOWNTOWN

American artist Mike Berg works with master artisans in Istanbul, Turkey—where he now lives—to create large textiles graced by abstract forms, infused with the spirit of both abstract expressionist oil paintings and traditional central Asian textile art. Learn more about Berg’s practice in the Artist Spotlight Q & A on page 14.

ON VIEW THROUGH 2/2/14 > DOWNTOWN

Borrowed from the collection of the Matthew and Iris Strauss Family Foundation, MCASD presents an installation by Brazilian conceptual artist Nelson Leirner, alongside other works. Leirner employs objects of pop culture and kitsch, along with humor and absurdity, to sharply critique the worlds of art and politics. Matthew and Iris Strauss are considered among the region’s elite collectors and the only local San Diegans included in the 2012 “ARTNews 200 Top Collectors” list. Their collection is divided between their personal holdings and the Matthew and Iris Strauss Family Foundation.
Perhaps best known for his work as an actor, director, and half of the comedy duo Cheech and Chong, Cheech Marin has collected Chicano art for the last 25 years. During this time he has built a renowned collection and organized exhibitions that have traveled across the United States. MCASD visitors might remember Chicano Visions: American Painters on the Verge, an exhibition featuring works from Marin’s collection that traveled to the Museum in 2004. Chicanitas: Small Paintings from the Cheech Marin Collection presents paintings by Chicano artists, including established figures such as John Valadez, Leo Limón, and Patssi Valdez, as well as younger emerging artists such as Jari “Werc” Álvarez, Ana Teresa Fernández, and Sonia Romero. Each of the works in the exhibition takes the format of approximately 16 inches square or smaller, and depicts subjects of a personal nature—familiar landscapes, notions of cultural heritage, familial relationships, and social community. In Chicanitas, Marin has drawn together a rich variety of works that express the complex texture of the Chicano experience.

Chicanitas: Small Paintings from the Cheech Marin Collection is organized by the Museum of Contemporary Art San Diego. Institutional support for MCASD is provided, in part, by the City of San Diego Commission for Arts and Culture.
ARTIST SPOTLIGHT

MCASD SITS DOWN WITH CHEECH
Learn what makes this collector’s clock tick.

MCASD: You have long been a collector of Chicano art and have served as an outspoken advocate for artists practicing in that context. Tell us about your larger interest in Chicano art and your motivations for this particular exhibition.

CHEECH: I’ve always been interested in art ever since I can remember. I was an autodidact and treated myself to an education in art by going to the public library and taking all the art books and looking at the pictures. When the time came that I could afford to buy art, I started going around to galleries on the Westside of L.A. and as I did I discovered the Chicano artists. There was an immediate connection with them, not only because [I am] Chicano. As I started collecting, a story started emerging—this was about something. This was telling a story about the Chicano people and their myriad viewpoints—humorous, or historical, or gender-based, or abstract, even. My motivation right now is to see how the story is emerging and changing for this generation of Chicano artists, and to see how they interpret what “Chicano” means.

MCASD: Chicanitas features works of a variety of subjects and in numerous styles, from photorealistic portraits to painterly, abstracted landscapes, and everything in between. What do you think this wide range of methods reveals to the viewer?

CHEECH: That characterizes Chicano art—a wide variety of painting styles. That’s because it’s not a school based upon style, it’s a school based upon Chicano experience. That’s the commonality between all the artists. The understanding of [the connection between school and identity], especially on my part, has evolved. I see really what it is every time I do a new show. I’ve come to the conclusion that identity is probably the most important reason to have a school, and it has been through time immemorial. The patina of time makes us interpret it differently from the actual time in which it occurred. I don’t think you could have a higher reason for making a school than identity.

MCASD: The exhibition’s tag line is (size doesn’t matter), which refers to the small format of the works in Chicanitas. If size doesn’t matter, what kind of power do these small paintings hold?

CHEECH: They hold a very unique power—the power of intimacy. Small paintings whisper to you. You have to get up close to them and pay attention because they’re [communicating] a message that is told at a very low volume, in a specific space. [As an artist], you have to say everything you were going to say in a larger context, but concisely, and the clarity of vision has to come in this space. From making movies, you find out that when you don’t have a lot of money or time, you get very inventive as to how to represent something in that kind of space. That’s what these paintings do.
ART ON THE ROAD

The Very Large Array may have come to a close, but works from the exhibition recently traveled to the Nelson Gallery at UC Davis. Visit Another California: Perspectives from the Museum of Contemporary Art San Diego and you might recognize Arte-Reembolso/Art Rebate by David Avalos, Louis Hock, and Elizabeth Sisco alongside works on loan by artists Allan Sekula and Iana Quesnell.

THE SPRING THING

FRIDAY, MARCH 21 > 6 PM–MIDNIGHT > DOWNTOWN

A host committee of young talents and industry taste makers in the fine art and design community have joined forces to curate The Spring Thing, hosted by Avant Garde.

Mingle with San Diego’s most talented young artists and designers, dine on delectable food created by San Diego’s culinary rock stars, dance all night to the hottest DJs in the Museum's galleries, and of course, imbibe free flowing craft cocktails and local brews.

Event chairs Jennifer Nelson, Tom Lien, and Beatriz Zayas have teamed up with our Curatorial team to choose a single work of art from the Museum’s permanent collection to serve as the inspiration and theme for the evening. The work will help craft the vision for the night—from décor and invitation to attire.

The Spring Thing is the party of the season. Visit www.mcasd.org for more details. Tickets may be reserved by contacting April Farrell at aefarrell@mcasd.org.

SPRING IS THE NEW SUMMER.
PEEK INTO THE PROCESS  American artist Mike Berg lives in Istanbul but recently took up residency at MCASD Downtown, where his large, abstract kilims are on view through February 23.

MCASD: You have painted, made sculptures, and for the past decade worked with textiles. How have you employed pattern in these various media? Do you regard pattern as a kind of abstraction or as a reference?

MB: My earliest work was figurative, evolving into figures in architecture, eventually leading to architectural space (without figures) as a visceral thing. Surface and architectural detail, proportion and ornamentation lead to abstraction.

The tactility of the art in the 80s in New York had a big influence on me, but not the heavy symbolism or narrative. I was also being drawn to Indian miniatures, or parts of them, the rich repertoire of geometric pattern. Japanese prints and screens were things I loved too. In a free-form way I became more and more interested in Arshile Gorky's loopy painting compositions and the extraordinary graphic linear tone quality of his drawings, a lot of which he stole from Picasso (I love this too), the drip paintings of Pollock and Islamic script, both geometric and calligraphic.

Upon entering the covered bazaar in Istanbul, I saw for the first time the extraordinary embroidery work from Central Asia, in particular embroideries called Suzani from Uzbekistan. Immediately I saw what to me was an unmistakable connection to Gorky's work. Gorky, an Armenian living in Eastern Turkey until the Armenians were erased from the country, undoubtedly had to have seen Suzanis. Most Suzanis have a flowing, funky abstract quality, a kind of biomorphic plant and flower feeling. I immediately related to these works. The drawing was spontaneous and quirky, the color was often inspired and the texture was very seductive to me. I liked the idea of making color, in effect, painting in thread.

But it wasn't just the embroidered textiles that I loved. It was also the knotted rugs and kilims, or flat woven rugs from many parts of Anatolia, Iran, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, and many other parts of Central Asia. Before I moved to Istanbul I had become committed to abstraction. I was completely satisfied with its expressive potential. I'm sure that is why I felt an immediate attachment to Islamic art. Because of the prohibition of figuration in Islamic art, the limitation led to a great flowering of abstract form and design.

MCASD: After you moved to Turkey in 1999, you began creating compositions with embroidery and woven kilims. These geometric works are derived from predetermined moves: can you describe the role chance and systems play in your work?

MB: Years before coming to Turkey, I got tired of how I was solving my paintings, my natural propensity—what colors, what shapes, the drawing. I had been working on a section of a painting with a dead area that I could think of no solution for. I remember walking into a show of William Burroughs' paintings on plywood. He had shot holes in them. I thought what a great idea; if there's an area that doesn't work, blow it away.

I work with pattern but it can be dangerously boring too. I like to give the overall sense of pattern but subvert it, make an imbalance or distortion. That can happen by establishing a set of rules that have to be followed. There have been many different sets of rules that I've used to create paintings and sculptures, such as random color or shape selection, combinations of layering, natural migration of a repeated form. It's amazing how different the results can be and it helps to keep the work fresh for me. I like not knowing what a work will look like until it's done.

MCASD: What themes are you investigating in your current work?

MB: The themes of my work don't change so much, but the material and techniques do. I was a painter for years before I became a sculptor. The sculptures to start with were ink drawings. I imagined line drawings in space, line drawings minus the paper mounted off the wall a short distance away, casting shadows on the wall. Later, I had the desire to make the pieces move into space. I took flat ink drawings that were cut in steel and rolled them so they could stand. I also began to work with scale; small ink drawings became large metal sculptures. I like translating ideas into different materials and different scales, learning about new techniques of fabrication. Right now I'm making small scale, almost architectural designs, that I'm having hand cut by brilliant craftspeople into minimalist, wearable sculpture. My focus is always evolving but working within a basic set of principles.

ART AUCTION 2014

APRIL 30, 2014 > LA JOLLA
Mark your calendar for one of MCASD’s most popular and exciting events. The 2014 Art Auction will feature a live and silent auction of artwork selected by MCASD curators, including paintings, sculptures, and works on paper by internationally recognized artists and emerging contemporary artists. Enjoy an evening of cocktails and hors d’oeuvres as you bid on your favorite works—all while benefitting MCASD’s art acquisition, exhibition, and education programs.
FLY AWAY WITH US

FEBRUARY 7–9, 2014 > MARFA, TEXAS
Contemporary & International Collectors are invited for a weekend getaway to the quirky-cool art destination of Marfa. This Texas gem is an enclave for contemporary art and artists, and the group will experience a behind-the-scenes tour of Ballroom Marfa, visit the Donald Judd-founded Chinati Foundation, enjoy a “Star Party” at the McDonald Observatory, and perhaps experience the infamous Marfa Lights firsthand.

APRIL 3–6, 2014 > BENTONVILLE & ST. LOUIS
Later in the spring, Contemporary & International Collectors will enjoy a visit to Bentonville and St. Louis, in a special collaboration with our friends at the UCSD Stuart Collection. Our two groups will take in the sights together at the groundbreaking Crystal Bridges Museum in Bentonville, Arkansas, before MCASD takes off on a private charter flight to the city of St. Louis for the remainder of the tour.

OCTOBER 12–20, 2014 > BERLIN & MUNICH
Next fall, our International Collectors are invited to experience the sprawling art scenes in Berlin and Munich. These two destinations are at the forefront of contemporary art, and our group will experience many art spaces, strong private collections, and the vibrant cultural scene that has come to be expected of the artistic hub of Berlin.

Allison DeFrancesco’s Legendary Swim

NYU Alumna, cancer survivor, nominee for Leukemia & Lymphoma Society’s Woman of the Year, and MCASD Assistant Registrar—at 25 years old, Allison DeFrancesco has accomplished a lot. A dual U.S.-Italian citizen, Allison recently added another feat to that impressive list: becoming the first Italian woman to successfully swim the English Channel. She completed the swim as a tribute to her NYU swim coach, Lauren Beam, who lost a courageous battle to colon cancer in September 2011. Allison, who is currently in remission herself after a two-year battle with lymphoma, balanced full-time work with swim training six days a week, swimming a weekly average of 55 miles in frigid conditions at La Jolla Cove.

Allison officially completed the swim in just 11 hours and 14 minutes. She had to overcome winds upwards of 18 mph, brave 2-3 m waves, jellyfish, and 60° water to complete her journey.

Besides dispelling stigmas around discussing the “c” word, Allison is now raising money to support First Descents. We checked-in with Allison to see how she’s doing and to learn more about First Descents.

MCASD: Your efforts have gone a long way towards supporting First Descents. Tell us about what they do as an organization and why it’s so important to you.

AD: When Lauren passed away, I was struggling with the idea that I had become “that cancer patient.” One day I ran ten miles and the next I had lost my hair, control of my body, much of my short-term memory and with that, my identity. After treatment, doctors told me to go home and be “normal,” but that was the last thing I could relate to.

Lauren’s passing was a wake-up call that I had been blessed with the unique opportunity to take a negative series of events and do something momentously positive. The Channel was to be one more way to challenge myself and in turn, get myself outside and back on my feet.

First Descents is a non-profit that provides a platform for other young adults like myself to do just that: to defy their illnesses and regain their lives through outdoor adventures.

There is one young adult diagnosed with cancer in the U.S. every eight minutes. At that moment, their lives are forever changed by something they don’t deserve and did nothing to get. Where we can help is in understanding the importance of survivorship and that it takes a community. First Descents provides that community and the adventure of a lifetime, free of charge.

MCASD: Tauno, you’ve been here longer than almost everyone but some people still may not be familiar with the work you do. What are you responsible for here at the Museum?

TH: Gardening, maintenance, and cleaning up—sweating it out at the Museum is very demanding.

MCASD: A lot can happen in 30 years. Tell us about one of your crazier moments.

TH: Once we had a new landscaping crew helping out in the Sculpture Garden and I noticed they took Gabriel Orozco’s Long Yellow Hose—not knowing that this was a permanent installation—rolled it up and threw it in some bushes off to the side of the path. Using aerial photos taken from the rooftop, I relaid all 1200 feet of it (over three football fields worth!) pretty successfully.

MCASD: As the man responsible for tending our beautiful Sculpture Garden, we have to ask—any parting gardening tips?

TH: Avoid the water bill! My home garden is made up of mostly cactus, succulents, and other native plant life.
MAKING THE ROUNDS WITH RON

Have you met Ron? Former NBA athlete, Deputy Sheriff, federal police officer, and current MCASD guard, Ron Hick’s remarkable journey has led him to walk many different paths in life. One of those paths recently landed him a role smack-dab in the center of a collaborative project between Berlin-based filmmaker Hito Steyerl and the Art Institute of Chicago. Ron can still recall the details of an inspiring moment from his childhood that forever altered his outlook on life and the many possibilities the future holds.

MCASD: Tell me about the early defining moment in your life.

RON: When I was very young I remember meeting a local officer on patrol in our neighborhood. To this day I can still recall two details: his patrol car number was #348 and his name was Officer White. He looked to me then and said “Son, you can be anything you want to be, even wear this uniform.” This had a profound effect and planted a vital seed in me. At the very least it kept me out of trouble growing up. And you know, even after growing up, going to high school, and getting picked by the Phoenix Suns in the 5th round of the NBA draft, after 40 years of age it hit me—now is my time for law enforcement. Getting sworn in was the highlight of my life.

MCASD: What do you enjoy most about working at MCASD?

RON: What drives me is a motivation to bring joy. I get a kick out of helping—this allows me the freedom to give back. The work is peaceful, my colleagues are wonderful, and I’m able to enjoy real friendship.

MCASD: How did you become involved with Hito Steyerl’s Guards?

RON: Initially, a large group of employees from the Chicago Art Institute came to visit MCASD in 2011 during Phenomenal. Among this group was the former curator for the Art Institute of Chicago, Lisa Donin, and during our conversation my previous experience as an officer came up. The following day she returned and told me a bit about her search for a guard with prior law enforcement background and asked if I’d be interested in taking part in a future interview regarding my experience with it. Hito called me three weeks later from Germany and asked if I’d be willing to fly out to Chicago. They had a ticket waiting for me at the airport and asked if I could come to Chicago on Wednesday. This was on a Monday!

MCASD: What was your experience in Chicago and working with the artist like?

RON: Oh man it was unreal. Less than a minute after I landed, the hotel phone rings and I’m being asked to come down to the Art Institute of Chicago straightaway. By then I’m thinking to myself, “What have you gotten yourself into?” I was expecting some sort of Q&A, I had no idea it was a lights, camera, action kind of affair. I spent twelve hours over two days reiterating a lot of my experiences as Deputy Sheriff and patrolling their gallery with cues from Hito while they film. It’s fascinating to see it come together in the context of the finished film. It’s surreal to know that I’m tasked with protecting a piece of art that I also participate in.

MCASD: Has anyone recognized you from the piece?

RON: Lots have! People usually do a double-take and I can see the gears turning in their head as they’re struggling with the urge to ask “That was you, huh?” I’ve even been asked for an autograph or two though I had to turn them down. It’s not about me. It’s about sharing and giving back. My whole life’s journey has been about serving others and giving back. That said, I do pose for the occasional photo (laughs).
